Welcome to the southernmost point of Scotland!

The Mull offers plenty of sea and sky, quiet bays and dramatic cliffs with nesting seabirds in spring and summer. Try to pick a clear day, for this is the land of extensive views, stretching as far as the Galloway hills, Isle of Man and Antrim coast. The rocky islets in Luce bay are known as the Scares, the biggest of which you may mistake for a ship.

Mull of Galloway A naturalists paradise, with facilities open from April to September. Drop into the visitor centre for the whole story, with details about the huge variety of local wildlife. The lighthouse, built by Stevenson in 1830 is open at weekends. Also, look for the double rampart, stretching between the bays at East and West Tarbet, thought to indicate the presence of a fort during the Iron Age.

Drummore This is Scotland's most southerly village and the hub of this area. It is further south than Carlisle and Durham and has an active harbour and a lively and expanding community.
